General Education Students First

• Students who have dyslexia are “general education students” first
• Can be educated in general education classrooms
• Benefit from a wide variety of supports
  • comprehensive, evidence-based approach to reading and language instruction that is implemented by trained educators
  • various accommodations and assistive technology
• Students with dyslexia sometimes require special education.