Risk Factors

While the path that leads to suicidal behavior is long and complex and there is no “profile” that predicts suicidal behavior with certainty, there are certain risk factors associated with increased suicide risk. In isolation, these factors are not signs of suicidal thinking. However, when present they signal the need to be vigilant for the warning signs of suicide.

- Access to means (e.g., firearms, knives, medication)
- Stressors (e.g., loss, peer relations, school, gender identity issues)
- History of depression, mental illness, or substance/alcohol abuse
- History of suicide in the family or of a close friend
- History of mental illness in the family

Here's What You Can Do:

LISTEN
- Assess for suicide risk.
- Listen without judgment.
- Ask open-ended questions, such as:
  - Tell me what happened?
  - How long have you been feeling this way?
  - Have you thought about suicide?

PROTECT
- Take action immediately.
- Do not leave your child alone. You or a trusted adult should supervise/monitor your child.
- Consider developing a safety plan at home and at school.

CONNECT
- Go to your child's school for support from school administration, mental health personnel, or a counselor.
- Contact Department of Mental Health, law enforcement, or child protective services, as needed.
- Help your child identify adults they trust at home and at school.

MODEL
- Remain calm. Establish a safe environment to talk about suicide.
- Be aware of your thoughts, feelings, and reactions as you listen without judgment.

TEACH
- Learn the warning signs and risk factors and provide information and education about suicide and self-injury.
- Teach your child how to ask for help and identify adults they can trust at home and at school.
- Teach healthy ways to cope with stress, including deep breathing, writing/drawing, exercise, or talking.
- Seek options for school and community resources, including referrals to professional mental health services.

Understanding Suicide: Myths & Facts

What Should I Do If I Am Worried About My Child?

If you believe that your child is thinking about suicide, approach the situation by asking. Asking is the first step in saving a life and can let them know that you are here for them and will listen. Here are some examples of how you may ask: Have you thought about suicide? or Sometimes when people feel sad the way you do, they think about suicide. Have you ever thought about it?

Myth: Suicide can’t be prevented. If someone is set on taking their own life, there is nothing that can be done to stop them.

Fact: Suicide is preventable. The vast majority of people contemplating suicide don’t really want to die. They are seeking an end to intense mental or physical pain. Most have a mental illness. Interventions can save lives.

Myth: Asking someone if they are thinking about suicide will put the idea in their head and cause them to act on it.

Fact: When someone you know is in crisis or depressed, asking them if they are thinking about suicide can actually help. By giving a person an opportunity to open up and share their troubles you can help alleviate their pain and find solutions.

Myth: Someone making suicidal threats won’t really do it, they are just looking for attention.

Fact: Those who talk about suicide or express thoughts about wanting to die, are at risk for suicide and need your attention. Most people who die by suicide give some indication or warning. Take all threats of suicide seriously. Even if you think they are just “crying out for help”—it is in fact a cry for help—so help.

Myth: It is easy for parents/caregivers to tell when their child is showing signs of suicidal behavior.

Fact: Unfortunately, research shows that this is not the case in a surprisingly large percentage of families. This illustrates the importance for parents/caregivers to be attentive to warning signs and risk factors; to ask direct questions; and be open to conversation.
